Excerpt: .against each other, amidst the reciprocities, the fair exchanges, and the civilizing intercourse which a true commerce and trade engender among nations. He has no objection to gold and silver coin being also a legal tender, as well as paper. It is so in France. The objection that it will set up three standards for the payment of debts, and the injustice to the creditor by the fluctuations in value of either standard, is more than met by the fact that gold and silver, as the present money of the world, do not fluctuate much, except as the currents of the world's commerce ebb and flow; and this cannot be controlled by Government, but must be guarded against by a domestic paper currency, from leaving us with too little money at any time to do business with; while the paper can be made...
