By Viscountess Wolseley

Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from In a College Garden Amongst many changes that the Great War has brought about, none are more marked than those which concern the future of Englishwomen. It is difficult at present to take a sufficiently comprehensive view of these altered conditions, but a few certainties that will affect women, stand out prominently and are worth consideration. The private soldier, when he returns home, will expect greater thrift and better cooking than he has hitherto exacted from his wife. During his sojourn in France he has learnt to appreciate the Frenchwoman's careful housekeeping. He knows how cleverly, with a few broken sticks, she can kindle a fire which enables her to cook a dinner for him that a king would not despise. It is not that she uses more or better ingredients than the Englishwoman, but centuries of careful saving and thoughtful consideration in making the most out of very little have taught her how to be a good manager. War has been brought often near to the homes of French people; they, like the...
